INTRODUCTION

“Of the 8.8 million lawful permanent residents (LPRs) eligible to naturalize today, fewer than one million naturalize each year. The New Americans Campaign aims to achieve an increase in application rates. We offer the programs and resources necessary for eligible residents to achieve the dream of American citizenship.”
- New Americans Campaign Impact and Success, February 2016

The New Americans Campaign (NAC) was started in 2011 by a group of funders and national partners to increase the number of eligible lawful permanent residents who apply to become United States citizens. The NAC draws together a network of legal service providers, community- and faith-based organizations, foundations and other allies in the public and private sectors to meet its goals.

The NAC includes national funders, national partner organizations, and local affiliates. The six national NAC funders (John S. and James L. Knight Foundation; Carnegie Corporation of New York; Wallace H. Coulter Foundation; Grove Foundation; Evelyn and Walter Haas, Jr. Fund; and JPB Foundation) provide leadership and resources to support ongoing efforts. National partner organizations disseminate best practices and strategies, provide training and technical assistance to local affiliates, and support local affiliates to work together and experiment with new models to accelerate naturalization. The local affiliates (henceforth NAC Partners), whose efforts are supported by national funders as well as local funders in a number of sites, work in local collaborations to support lawful permanent resident applicants (henceforth applicants) through the naturalization process. They provide low-cost or no-cost legal counsel and assistance in completing citizenship forms, conduct community outreach and education about naturalization processes and services, and offer guidance based on applicant eligibility for citizenship.

The Immigrant Legal Resource Center (ILRC), which leads the NAC, tracks and reports on the number of naturalization applications that NAC Partners complete each quarter. This study was funded by the Knight Foundation to provide data about application submission, approval and naturalization rates for applicants assisted by NAC Partners in the four NAC Knight-funded Communities: Charlotte, NC; Detroit, MI; Miami, FL; and San Jose, CA.

Purpose and Objectives

This study had three evaluation objectives:

1. Ascertain the percentage of naturalization applications that were submitted to the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services agency (USCIS) after completion with the assistance of a NAC Partner in a Knight Community between July 1, 2014 and December 30, 2014; the percentage of submitted applications that were approved, denied, or are still pending; and the percentage of applicants whose applications were approved who have naturalized;
2. For those who were not successful, ascertain the reasons that: 1) applicants did not submit applications, 2) applications were not approved by USCIS, and/or, 3) applicants had not naturalized after approval by USCIS; and,
3. Investigate any relation between the service model that an applicant received and their application and naturalization outcomes.

Previous Studies

Two previous studies have yielded information on application submission, approval, and naturalization levels. In the first study, the NAC and the USCIS cooperated in 2013 in determining the outcomes for 800 naturalization applications completed between 2011 and mid-2012. It found that, of the applications completed by NAC Partners exclusively through group processing, 89% were submitted to USCIS, and 95% of those adjudicated had naturalized (89% of those submitted). The 100 applications completed with a G-28 had a submission rate of 100% and a naturalization rate of 98%. On average, the submission rate was 85% and the adjudicated naturalization rate was 94%.

In the second study, the National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials (NALEO) Educational Fund surveyed 823 Latino applicants assisted in workshops and found that 92% submitted naturalization applications to USCIS. The study also reported that 79% of those who completed applications at workshops had been granted citizenship (computed by LTG to be 85% of those who submitted applications). This study did not report levels of application approval separately from naturalization. It was also not clear how long after the workshops the participants were surveyed.

While these studies provide important evidence of the effectiveness of group processing assistance, there are several differences that make it difficult to compare them to this study. First, unlike past studies, this study focuses exclusively on work done by NAC Partners in the Knight Communities.

Second, the NAC and USCIS study used complete administrative data for those who had submitted applications. That is, the USCIS had access to the full record of application submission, approval or denial, and naturalization for all of the applicants in the pool of applicants submitted by the NAC. This study does not have access to complete data for non-G-28 applications, and must rely on reaching potential applicants through telephone surveying, and having them agree to participate in the study. This difference in data gathering may lead to population differences, and therefore differences in results, between this study and the USCIS study.

Finally, the NAC and USCIS study outcomes were collected approximately 1.5 to 2 years after application submission, while this study collected outcomes 2 days to 1.3 years after application submission. This difference in the amount of time allowed for approval and naturalization may have had large effects on the approval and naturalization rates for this study when compared to previous studies.

Structure of This Report

This brief introductory section is followed by a Methodology section that explains the research methods used to collect data for this report. It is followed by a Results section that presents the findings of statistical analyses performed on the data collected. Finally, a Conclusion section summarizes the major findings from the statistical analyses, and places them within context.

METHODODOLOGY

Data were collected in two rounds: an interim round ("first round") that occurred from April to June, 2015; and a final round ("second round") from October to December, 2015. In each round of surveying, outcome data for tracking submission and naturalization rates for the New Americans Campaign were collected through one of two methods:

- Telephone/Web surveys, or
- Partner-submitted G-28 administrative data.

First Round

Telephone/Web Surveys

Overview and Timeline

This study was initiated on October 21, 2014. After a period of service provision, applicant consent, and applicant contact information collection that lasted from November 1, 2014 to December 30, 2014, telephone/web surveys were administered to applicants for one month across April/May 2015. Results were stored in a password-protected online database, and downloaded for statistical analysis at the end of the survey period.

The extremely short survey period in this study was driven by two factors. First, the lag time between application submission and adjudication by USCIS ranges, but is on average at least 5 months, and thus earlier surveying would not have allowed enough time for most applicants served in the November to December 2014 time period to have received approval/denial by USCIS. Second, LTG committed to producing an interim report by June 1, 2015, so that the Knight Foundation could consider the findings at its June Board meeting.

Survey Creation

The survey to be administered either on the web or over the telephone was based on three questions:

1. Did you submit your naturalization application?
2. Did U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) approve your application?
3. Have you naturalized yet (received your naturalization certificate)?

2 USCIS publishes national data monthly on the average processing time for a naturalization application. The most recent data is through August 2015 and is available at: http://www.uscis.gov/us-citizenship/naturalization-test/applicant-performance-naturalization-test. In each month of 2014 and 2015, it was between 5.1 and 6.3 months. USCIS focuses on keeping the average to six-months or less but many applications take longer.
Wording of the three questions was modified slightly from wording in the RFP through feedback from the ILRC New Americans Campaign Project Director and Knight Community Site leads.

If applicants answered a question affirmatively, the surveyor/web site then asked for an approximate date for the event in question. Then the next question was asked.

If applicants answered any of the question negatively, it was decided to use a categorical breakdown of reasons why the event might not have occurred. In order to compile a relatively comprehensive list of reasons that the events might not have occurred, LTG solicited reasons from ILRC and the Site Leads, who in turn solicited feedback from other local NAC partner staff.

The three lists of reasons why the events might not have occurred went through several rounds of feedback and revision, and the survey was finalized with approval from all parties. Both the web and telephone versions of the survey may be found in Appendix 1.

Survey Translation

After the survey was finalized, the web and telephone versions of the survey, including introductory and conclusory greetings, were translated into Spanish, Haitian Creole/Kreyol, and Vietnamese by a professional translation company (CyraCom Language Solutions in Tucson, AZ). Non-English versions of the survey may be found in Appendix 2.

Consent and Contact Information Gathering

Consent and contact information data collection was initiated at a meeting of LTG, ILRC, and the NAC site leaders from the four Knight Communities on November 1, 2014. From November 1, 2014 to December 30, 2014, each participating NAC Partner collected applicant consent to be contacted, contact information, and demographic information at the time of service provision. Partners also submitted type of service information and other partner involvement in service provision for each applicant. The full list of data requested from the NAC Partners in the Knight Communities is presented in Appendix 3.

Because some NAC Partners at three of the Knight Community sites (Detroit, Miami and San Jose) had already been collecting consent to be contacted, as well as the needed contact and service information, they were able to submit applicant information for services performed before November 1, 2014 going back to July 1, 2014. This greatly expanded the pool of applicants, since otherwise the pool would only have included those who received services between November 1, 2014 and December 30, 2014 – only an eight week window. By contrast, because the NAC Partners at the Charlotte site had not been collecting consent to contact information prior to the initiation of this study, they were only able to submit data from this eight week window, which explains their lower numbers in this study.

Data from each NAC Partner were funneled through the four Knight Community Sites to LTG. Contact, demographic, and service information for all four sites were combined into one large contact database. This database was then used to select the survey pool, as described in the next subsection.
Survey Pool Formation

Once the initial contact database of 624 applicants was created, a number of cuts were implemented to shape the applicant pool to meet survey parameters. First, all cases where a crucial piece of information — usable contact information (4 cases), language (19 cases), or date of service (4 cases) — was missing were dropped.

Second, all applicants whose only contact information was a mailing address were dropped (17 cases) because the data collection time frame was too short to allow mailing and receipt of paper survey forms. Third, cases that were duplicates (12 cases) were dropped.

Fourth, all applicants who received G-28 services were dropped (196 cases), since their outcome data would be captured through administrative data submitted by the NAC Partners (see next section). Finally, applicants whose contact language did not include English, Spanish, Haitian Creole/Kreyol, or Vietnamese, or who explicitly did not have an English exemption, were dropped (24 cases). This step was taken in agreement with the ILRC Project Director, and was intended to speed the process of recruiting surveyors. The dropped language with the most cases was Russian, with 7 cases.

The cumulative effect of these cuts left a pool of 388 applicants in the contact database (some applicant data had more than one issue) to be contacted for the survey. Although the original work proposal was to purposefully sample from the final contact pool to achieve the final survey sample, both LTG and the ILRC Project Director felt that the pool size of 388 applicants was small enough that all applicants should be contacted.

Web Survey

The final contact database contained 138 applicants who provided EMail addresses. Five of these were different applicants who provided the same EMail address as a contact. To avoid confusion in surveying, one applicant from each of these four instances was moved to the telephone survey pool, while the other applicant remained in the web survey pool.

The web version of the survey, in all four languages (English, Spanish, Haitian Creole/Kreyol, and Vietnamese) was hosted by Interceptum.com. All 133 applicants were sent individualized survey invitation EMail messages in their preferred contact language. In addition, all 133 applicants were sent their EMail invitation messages at the same time, regardless of when they received services. This decision was made in light of the extremely short survey window for this project, and the intention to move non-responders to the telephone survey pool with enough time to contact them.

Each invitation message greeted the applicant by name, mentioned the NAC Partner that had provided the applicant with services, and had a web link that would open a browser tab/window that loaded the survey from the Interceptum web site. Surveys were initially presented in each applicant’s preferred contact language, although applicants had the option of displaying the survey in any of the four survey languages.

After an introductory greeting, each question was presented on its own page, followed by its follow-up questions on successive pages. Clicking on an answer, and then clicking on the “Next” button loaded the next question.
Skip logic (as detailed in the surveys in Appendix 1) was applied based on applicants’ answers to each question and follow-up question. An answer of “Yes” to any of the main three questions led to a “What date?” follow-up question, and then the next main question. An answer of “No” to any of the three main questions led to a “Why not?” follow-up question with several “Choose all that apply” categories. Each follow-up question also had an “Other” box for applicants to use if they did not see their reason in the category list. Answering “No” to a main question always led to the end of the survey (the Thank You screen) after the “Why not?” follow-up question.

Applicants were allowed to save their answers at any time during the survey, and to return to the survey at any time after starting. They were also allowed to return to the survey even after clicking on the final “Submit” button.

After the first invitations were sent, applicants with incorrect/non-existent EMail addresses that were provided to LTG were moved to the telephone survey pool. The individualized invitation letter was re-sent to applicants who had not completed the web survey up to three times, after varying lengths of time, over the course of two weeks. At the end of two weeks, if applicants had not accessed the web survey, their contact information was moved to the telephone survey pool.

Telephone Survey

The final contact database contained 250 applicants who provided telephone numbers and did not provide EMail addresses. Four applicants who had duplicate EMail addresses were moved from the web survey pool to the telephone survey pool as described above. Also as described above, applicants with incorrect EMail addresses were added to the telephone survey pool right after the first web survey invitation messages were sent. And finally as described above, applicants were moved from the web survey pool to the telephone survey pool after they had not responded to the web survey invitation.

Some applicants were also removed from the pool. First, 27 applicants had duplicate telephone contact numbers (one telephone number was given by 3 applicants). To avoid confusion in surveying, the applicant with the earliest date of service for each telephone number was chosen to remain in the pool, and the other applicants were removed from the pool to be surveyed in the follow-up round of surveying (see Next Steps section). In addition, 24 applicants from the pool had received services in January and February of 2015. It was decided to leave these applicants out of this initial round of surveying because the time elapsed between their receipt of services and the surveying would be less than the five months that USCIS usually requires to process an application. They, too, will be surveyed in the follow-up round of surveying (see Next Steps section).

These additions and subtraction led to a final telephone survey pool of 328 applicants.

The telephone survey was administered by seven surveyors: 4 Spanish speakers, 1 Haitian Creole/Kreyol speaker, 1 Vietnamese speaker, and 1 English speaker. Each surveyor was individually briefed about the background and goals of the study, familiarized with the survey, and trained on the use of the web interface used for survey data entry.

Applicant survey information was uploaded to a specialized Interceptum survey for surveyor use. This survey could both display uploaded applicant information (applicant name, NAC Site, NAC Partners who provided services, date of service provision, age, sex, country of origin, contact language, language spoken at home, and contact information), and allow the entry of both contact attempt information and applicant survey answers. Access to each applicant’s survey page on the Interceptum website was password-protected to keep the applicants’ personal information confidential.
Methodology

Links to applicant survey pages were sent to each surveyor in batches in order of service receipt. Applicants were assigned to surveyors based on a match between the applicant’s contact language and the surveyor’s language ability and geographical proximity (to minimize time differences). Applicants with English as their contact language could be assigned to any surveyor.

A total of three batches of applicant links were sent to the seven surveyors. Survey progress was captured by the survey website and monitored by the LTG Project Director. Survey progress information was used to balance the number of applicants a surveyor received in each new batch of links.

Surveyors kept records of all attempts to contact each applicant and their results through the specialized Interceptum survey. Although the number of contact attempts was not limited, the surveyors were limited to four “touches” per applicant, including leaving messages and talking to someone. Busy signals and no answers did not count as "touches.” In general, surveyors were told to have only one "touch" per applicant per day unless someone else said: "Call them at this number today." This system was put in place to minimize applicant inconvenience.

Again, to minimize applicant inconvenience, surveyors were told to have their first attempt to contact an applicant be approximately between 6:30pm and 7:30pm (in the applicant’s time zone) on weekdays, and approximately between 10:00am to 7:30pm (in the applicant’s time zone) on weekends. They were also instructed not to call earlier than 9:00am or later than 8:00pm (in the applicant’s time zone) unless the applicant told them that it was OK to do so.

When actually conducting a survey, surveyors were told to emphasize that they were not recording the call, that they were not from any agency, and that what the applicant told them is private.

As emphasized on the telephone survey (see Appendix 1), if an applicant answered “No” to any of the three main questions, the surveyors were not to read the full list of "No" reasons, but to prompt the applicant for a reason or reasons. The surveyors then chose the appropriate "No" reason checkboxes based on the applicant’s response. If a reason was not listed in the list of “No” reasons, surveyors were instructed to use the "Other" box to explain the reason(s).

If applicants could not provide exact dates for events, surveyors were told that approximate dates were permissible. Surveyors were also instructed to make sure to get applicant agreement about what date was being entered.

Telephone surveying continued until all 334 applicants had either: completed a survey, been marked as “Could not reach” after four “touches,” or refused to take the survey.

Once surveying was complete, all survey data, both web-based and telephone-based, was downloaded from the survey website and combined into a single database.
G-28 Administrative Data

The second form of data collection involved the submission of G-28 administrative data from NAC Partners. Because filing a G-28 designates the NAC Partner as acting on the applicant’s behalf, the NAC Partners have access to all correspondence with USCIS. Thus the NAC Partners know when the N-400 applications are submitted, when USCIS approves or denies them, and sometimes when the applicant receives their certificate.

NAC Partners who had served G-28 applicants were asked to submit this information by May 18, 2015 for all G-28 applicants they served from July 1, 2014 to December 30, 2014. The full list of data requested from the Knight Community Site Partners is presented in Appendix 3.

Data was once again funneled through the four Knight Community Sites. Once received from the sites, this data was combined into a single database.

Second Round

Telephone Surveys

Overview and Timeline

Once the first round of surveying and the ensuing interim report to the Knight Foundation were complete, the planned second round of surveying took place starting 4 months after the end of the first round’s data collection. The second round of surveying had been planned from the outset as capturing the definitive data for the study.

For the second round of surveying, telephone surveys were administered to applicants during October 2015. Results were stored in a password-protected online database, and downloaded for statistical analysis at the end of the survey period.

Survey Creation

The survey used in the second round of surveying was the same survey used in the first round of surveying. Please see above for survey creation details.

Survey Pool Formation

The pool for the second round of surveying started from the results of the first round. Any cases that: 1) had not been reached after four “touches,” 2) had not been reached because surveying ended, 3) had been surveyed, but were still in process, or 4) had as their subject the second, non-contacted, participant in the same household as someone who was chosen for the first round of surveying; were the basis of the survey pool for the second round of surveying. After all categories were added, there were a total of 252 participants in the survey pool for the second round of surveying.
A breakdown of the number of participants in each category is displayed in Table 1, below:

Telephone Survey

For the second round of surveying, all applicants were surveyed by telephone. The telephone survey was administered by 4 surveyors. Otherwise, telephone survey procedures were the same as the first round (see above).

Telephone surveying continued until all 252 applicants had either: completed a survey, been marked as “Could not reach” after four “touches,” or refused to take the survey. Unlike the first round of surveying, no time limit was placed on data collection, so all applicants were ultimately placed in one of these categories.

Once surveying was complete, all survey data was downloaded from the survey website and combined into a single database.

G-28 Administrative Data

For the second round of surveying, starting in November 2015, all three NAC Partners who had served G-28 applicants were asked to submit current status information for all G-28 applicants they served from July 1, 2014 to December 30, 2014.

Data were once again funneled through the four Knight Community Sites. Once received from the sites, these data were combined into a single database.

RESULTS

Process Results

First Round

Web Survey
In mid-April, 2015, email invitations to the web survey were sent to 134 applicants. After a period of two weeks, 12 applicants had responded, one of whom did not complete the survey, for a total of 11 web surveys. The other applicants, as described in the Methodology section, were moved to the telephone survey pool.

Telephone Surveys
From late-April to mid-May, 2015, seven telephone surveyors made 543 calls to 328 eligible applicants in the contact database in order to conduct the outcome survey. Calls were governed by the guidelines presented in the Methodology section.

Table 2, below, presents the outcomes of these calls and the web survey. A total of 134 applicants, out of 328 possible, completed telephone surveys, an overall return rate of 40.8%. This rate is even higher if one considers that, of those who were actually reached (134 completed + 14 refusals = 148), 90.5% of respondents chose to participate in the survey. This represents an extremely high level of cooperation from the pool of applicants. It took an average of 1.52 calls to complete a survey, with a minimum of 1 attempt and a maximum of 5 attempts.

A total of 167 applicants could not be reached. Because of the short timeframe for surveying, many of these had been called only one (83) or two (45) times out of a maximum of four “touches” before the end of surveying, suggesting that the response rate might have been even higher with more time for surveying. Only 14 applicants (4.3%) refused to take the survey when reached, a very low rate of refusal.

Table 2 also shows that two applicants were dropped from the study: one because they had completed the application with a different (non-NAC) organization, and one because they could not recall the information.
G-28 Data

Three of the four Knight Community Sites submitted G-28 administrative data for this study: Detroit, Miami, and San Jose. The sites submitted data for all applicants who had received services between July 1, 2014 and December 30, 2014.3

Second Round

Telephone Surveys

In October, 2015, four telephone surveyors made 651 calls to 252 eligible applicants in the contact database in order to conduct the outcome survey. Calls were governed by the guidelines presented in the Methodology section.

Table 3, below, presents the outcomes of these calls. A total of 109 applicants, out of 252 possible, completed telephone surveys, an overall return rate of 43.3% (an improvement over the first round’s 40.8%). This rate is even higher if one considers that, of those who were actually reached (109 completed + 11 refusals = 120), 90.8% of respondents chose to participate in the survey. This represents an extremely high level of cooperation from the pool of applicants. It took an average of 1.89 calls to complete a survey, with a minimum of 1 attempt and a maximum of 5 attempts.

A total of 132 applicants could not be reached. Only 11 applicants (4.4%) refused to take the survey when reached, a very low rate of refusal.

G-28 Data

In November, 2015, three of the four Knight Community Sites submitted G-28 administrative data for this study: Detroit, Miami, and San Jose. The sites submitted data for all applicants who had received services between July 1, 2014 and December 30, 2014.4

3 In the first round, the San Jose site submitted all of its data without dates to protect applicant privacy. This required post-hoc adjustment to the data in order to preserve some comparability to data from the other sites. Since the reduced window for services was 6 months of the original 8 months, San Jose’s data was reduced by a factor of 25%. These adjustments led to a group of 431 G-28 applicant cases.

4 In the second round, one of the partners at the San Jose site submitted its data without dates to protect applicant privacy. This required post-hoc adjustment to the data in order to preserve some comparability to data from the other
Because the final ratio of 109 surveys to 440 G-28 cases is uneven,\(^5\) outcome analyses will be presented both for all cases, and split by service model. This analytic strategy will mitigate any sample imbalance and allow for unambiguous interpretation of results.

Outcome Results

Sources of Data

Data for the following analyses come from three different sources (see Table 4, below). First, participant data from the first round of surveying were included in these analyses if their application process had reached a conclusion, either in acceptance by USCIS or rejection by USCIS. A total of 93 participants from the first round of surveying were included in the current dataset, 76 whose applications were accepted by USCIS and 17 whose applications were rejected by USCIS.

Second, participant data from the second round of surveying were included if they completed a survey. A total of 103 participants from the second round were included.\(^6\)

Third, updated participant G-28 data from the three Knight Community Sites that provided G-28 services were included. A total of 440 participants for whom updated G-28 data were available were also included.

Data from these three sources were combined into a single database that ultimately contained data from 636 participants.

\(^5\) Although this ratio is uneven, it is important to point out that these numbers do not reflect the ratio of applicants actually served. As reported in the Survey Pool Formation subsection of the Methodology section, NAC Partners submitted contact information for 428 non-G-28 cases (624 total – 196 G-28 = 428). Duplicate contacts, missing information, and language cuts reduced that to 328 contacts for surveying, of which 44% were reached and agreed to participate.

\(^6\) Six of the 109 participants completing surveys in the second round were found to have come from duplicate records and had completed surveys in the first round. Appropriately, the second round surveys are not included in the final dataset.

Applicant Characteristics

The next set of tables presents applicant demographic characteristics for the study sample. Table 5, below, presents applicant sex. The majority of applicants were female (136 or 59.9%). As will be the case with several of the following tables, the total for the Table 4 is less than 636, the total study sample. This is because information about the sex of applicants was not available for all applicants. Data availability for any given variable differed by NAC Partner and the data that they collected about their clients.

The highest number of applicants were from Mexico (102 or 16.2%) and Iraq (92 or 14.6%), followed closely by Cuba (85 or 13.5%) and Haiti (81 or 12.8%). These varied backgrounds are in keeping with the geographic diversity of the four sites, and thus diversity of immigrants, in the four Knight Communities: Charlotte, Detroit, Miami, and San Jose.

Service Characteristics

Table 8, below, presents the number of applicants per NAC Site. The majority of applicants were from the Miami site (360 or 56.6%), followed distantly by San Jose (134 or 21.1%) and Detroit (121 or 19.0%). These three sites all had been collecting consent to contact before the current study started in November, and thus could contribute applicant contact information back to July 1, 2014. They also had a large number of G-28 applicants, for whom outcomes were collected through administrative data rather than surveying. These two factors led to a large imbalance between the number of applicants in the current study from these three sites and Charlotte (with 21 applicants). Charlotte did not have prior consent to contact or G-28 applicants, and thus could only contribute applicant contact information for the months of November and December, 2014, a traditionally quiet time for services. It should be stressed that this situation should not in any way reflect negatively on the Charlotte site’s cooperation, which was enthusiastic.

Table 9, below, presents the types of services that applicants received. The vast majority of applicants in the current study received G-28 services (440 or 69.2%), followed distantly by Small–to-Medium Group (39 or 6.1%) and Individual (33 or 5.2%). Although previous tables have not included records that have missing data for a particular variable (e.g., Sex of Applicant), all analyses involving service model will explicitly include records with missing data in order to present the most complete picture possible of applicant outcomes.

Service Outcomes

Application Submission

Applications were submitted between 7/1/2014 and 10/13/2015.

Table 13, below, presents the reasons that applicants gave for the applications that were not submitted. In this table the total of the “# of People” column is 15, or less than the 21 “No” answers in Table 12, because some applicants did not provide a reason. Almost half of applicants (7) indicated that they did not have enough money to pay the fee and did not qualify for the fee waiver. One-fifth (3) of applicants indicated that they had not submitted their applications because they did not have enough money to pay the fee and did not know about the fee waiver. Another fifth of applicants indicated that they were not sure why they had not submitted their applications or did not get around to it.

Although an application submission rate of 96.7% is excellent, it is important to examine this statistic in more detail. Because G-28 service usually includes the submission of applications, G-28 submission rates are usually close to 100%.

Table 14, below, presents the rate of application submission by service model with all non-G-28 services combined. As is evident, the rate of submission for G-28 service is, indeed, 100%. The applicant-submitted (non-G-28) submission rate is 89.3% — less than 100%, but still very high.

Table 15, below, presents the rate of application submission by all the different service models. The service model with the lowest submission rate was Small-to-Medium Group (2-49) with 82.1%, followed by those participants for whom service model was not reported (Missing) with 85.7%. Both Medium Group (50-99) and Large Group (100+) had higher submission rates, with 93.3% and 90.0% respectively. Although the number of participants is small (5), Large Group with 1:1 Follow-up service had a rate of 100.0%, as did Individual service (it is worth noting that these high rates are the same as that for G-28 service). In addition, the use of new strategies for service provision continues to show promise, as suggested by the 91.7% submission rate of Drop-in Computer Lab service.

A second service-model-oriented variable that might affect submission rates is whether Citizenshipworks was used in the preparation of the application. Table 16, below presents the results of this analysis, which was only possible for the surveyed applicants. The rate of submission when Citizenshipworks was used was 92.3%, not noticeably different from the rate when Citizenshipworks was not used (91.2%), but good given the savings in resources that Citizenshipworks represents.

Approval by USCIS

Table 17, below, presents the next outcome for the current study, whether applications that were completed with the assistance of a NAC Partner and submitted to USCIS were approved by USCIS. This analysis was conducted on the 516 applicants who had submitted applications and for whom data on this question were available. The vast majority of applications (457 or 88.9%) were approved. When only considering cases that had been adjudicated, the approval rate is 92.9%.

Table 18, below, presents the reasons that applicants gave for their applications not being approved by USCIS. Unlike Table 13 (above), which only included information from the surveyed applicants, Table 18 also includes information from the 5 G-28 cases for which we have data. Again, in this table the total of the “# of People” column is greater than 20 because applicants could choose more than one reason. More than a third of applicants (8 or 40.0%) indicated that they had failed the English exam, and a quarter of applicants (5 or 25.0%) had failed the civics exam. Four applicants indicated that they were denied on other legal grounds, and another four applicants indicated that they had not submitted requested information because they did not know that they had to submit it. Finally, 1 applicant indicated that they had not submitted requested information because they could not get the information.

Table 19, below, presents the rate of application approval by service model with all non-G-28 services combined. The rate of approval for G-28 service, 96.1% of adjudicated cases (94.1% of all submitted G-28 cases including both adjudicated and pending), is higher than the overall rate for non-G-28 service, 86.3% of adjudicated cases (78.9% of all submitted non-G-28 cases).

9 A number of G-28 cases had no data other than application submission dates.
10 1 surveyed respondent did not answer, and 14 G-28 cases did not have reasons for denials.

Table 20, below, presents the rate of application approval by all service models. There are some differences in approval rates evident in Table 20, with applicants receiving services in Large Groups (100+) having approval rates of 100% and applicants receiving services in Drop-in Computer Labs having approval rates of 85.0% of adjudicated cases (77.3% of submitted cases). While it is unclear why this is the case, and some of the percentages may be misleading because some of the service models have so few cases that a change in one case can make a large difference, it is interesting to note the differences.

Table 21, shows whether the use of Citizenshipworks\textsuperscript{11} had any effect on approval rates. The rate of approval when Citizenshipworks was used was 81.8% of adjudicated cases (75.0% of submitted cases), lower than the rate when Citizenshipworks was not used (89.8% of adjudicated, 85.9% of submitted), but still good given the savings in resources that Citizenshipworks represents.

Naturalization

Table 22, below, presents the final outcome for the current study, whether applicants who had applications approved by USCIS had naturalized. This analysis was conducted on the 437 applicants who had had their applications approved and for whom data on this question were available. Table 22 shows that the vast majority of applicants, 90.2% of the 394 with approvals (79.8% of the 494 who had submitted applications and for whom we had complete data\(^\text{12}\)) had naturalized by the time of data collection.

Table 23, below, presents the reasons that the 42 applicants for whom we have information have not been naturalized yet. Although in this table the total of the “# of People” column could be greater than 42 because applicants could choose more than one reason, each applicant happened to have given a single reason, and so the total for the column is 42. The vast majority (26) of applicants indicated that they had received an oath ceremony appointment that had not occurred yet. A further 15 applicants had not received an appointment yet.

Finally, tables showing rates of naturalization by service model and by use of Citizenshipworks will not be presented because there were no meaningful hypotheses relating these factors to rates of naturalization to examine.

\(^{12}\) Those applicants who submitted applications for whom we have complete data are computed as follows: 35 (applicants denied by USCIS) + 22 (applicants who have not heard back from USCIS) + 437 (applicants who answered the naturalization question) = 494.
CONCLUSION

Summary of Results

Results from this study are drawn from the analysis of survey responses from 196 applicants and G-28 administrative data from 440 applicants, totaling 636 cases. Each of these applicants received naturalization application assistance from a NAC Partner in one of the four Knight Communities: Charlotte, NC; Detroit, MI; Miami, FL; and, San Jose, CA. Application services were received in the last half of 2014, between July 1 and December 30. Outcome data were collected between October and December, 2015.

Overall, 96.7% (615) of the applications that were completed with assistance from a NAC Partner were submitted to USCIS for adjudication. Of applicants who received non-G-28 services from a NAC Partner, 89.3% submitted their applications (see Figure 1, below). All of the applications (100%) were submitted for applicants who received G-28 services. The most common reason cited for not submitting an application was lack of money for the fee.

Tracking NAC Submission and Naturalization Rates

Applicants who received Individual (1:1) (w/out G-28), Large Group (100+), or G-28 services all had submission rates of 100% (see Figure 2, below). Applicants who received Medium Group (50-99) services had a submission rate of 93.3%. Those who received Small-to-Medium Group (2-49) services had the lowest submission rate (82.1%).

Of the applications that USCIS adjudicated by final data collection, the approval rate was 92.9%. Figure 3 (below) shows the breakdown of all applications. Of the 514 applications submitted to USCIS, 88.9% (457) had been approved by final data collection, and an additional 4.3% (22) had not been adjudicated by final data collection. Only 6.8% (35) had been adjudicated and denied. Of the 22 people who had had their applications denied and for whom we had data, roughly 13 had failed either the English or civics exams, roughly 5 had not submitted requested information, and roughly 4 were denied on another legal ground.

Finally, 90.2% (394) of applicants who had had their applications approved had naturalized (79.8% of the 494 who had submitted applications and for whom we had complete data) (see Figure 4, below). Of the 42 people\textsuperscript{13} who had not naturalized yet and were surveyed, 26 had received oath ceremony appointments that were in the future, 15 had not received their oath ceremony appointment yet, and only 1 had missed their oath ceremony.

\textbf{Comparisons with Earlier Studies}

Although, as noted in the Introduction, it is not advisable to compare the results from this study to previous studies because of the large data collection and time frame differences, nevertheless we will note some similarities and differences in the results.

This study found a non-G-28, applicant-submitted submission rate of 89.3%. The NAC and USCIS A# study had found a submission rate for group processing applications of 89%, and the NALEO study had found a submission rate for group processing applications of 92%. Both this study and the A# study found G-28 submission rates of 100%. This study’s applicant-submitted submission rate fits in between that of the A# study and the NALEO study.

This study found an approval rate of 92.9% of applications that had been adjudicated by USCIS (88.9% of applications submitted to USCIS). Although the NAC and USCIS A# study did not report application approvals as a separate statistic, it found that 94% of adjudicated applications resulted in naturalization. Therefore, the approval rate for applicants who eventually naturalized can be computed to be 89.3% (the actual approval rate was probably higher).

The naturalization findings are more complicated to compare. Recall that the A# study had found that 89% of those who had submitted applications had naturalized, and that the NALEO study found that 85% of those who had submitted applications had naturalized. It is important to note, however, that the A# study collected data 1.5 to 2.0 years after application submission,\textsuperscript{14} while this study collected data from 2 days to 1.3 years after application submission. This large difference in the amount of time allowed for application approval and naturalization is likely the reason that there are a large number of applicants in this study who were approved but had not naturalized yet, as compared to the A# study where all applicants had completed their processes. In this study, at the time of data collection, 79.4% of applicants who had submitted applications had naturalized – although it is very unlikely that this is the final naturalization outcome. Because 41 of the applicants were only waiting for an oath ceremony appointment or had an appointment in the future at the time of data collection, it may be fair to assume that these applicants will be naturalized in the very near future.\textsuperscript{15} Thus the naturalization rate would rise to 88.1% of applicants who had submitted applications, much more in line with previous studies.

In sum, although these comparisons must be attempted cautiously given the difference in completeness between data from surveying and G-28 records and official data from USCIS, this study found submission and approval rates that were comparable to those of earlier studies that had more complete data collection capabilities and a longer time frame.

\textsuperscript{14} We do not know the data timeline for applicants in the NALEO study.

¡Bienvenido!

Hola, soy un investigador de LTG Associates que trabaja con [PARTNER NAME]. Estamos llamando a las personas que recibieron ayuda con sus solicitudes de ciudadanía para saber qué pasó con sus solicitudes. Tenemos solo tres preguntas para hacerle respecto a sus experiencias con respecto a la solicitud; no tardará mucho tiempo.

Hacemos esta encuesta para el Centro de Recursos Legales para Inmigrantes, como parte de la campaña Nuevos estadounidenses, que proporcionó algunos fondos a [PARTNER NAME] para que lo ayude con su solicitud de ciudadanía. Queremos averiguar si las personas presentaron sus solicitudes, si fueron aprobadas y, si no lo fueron, por qué.

No formamos parte de ninguna agencia gubernamental y la información que me proporcione no se reportará a ninguna agencia gubernamental. De hecho, toda información que me proporcione será privada, y se reportará a [PARTNER NAME] ni al Centro de recursos legales para inmigrantes salvo como parte de las cifras totales. Además, esta llamada NO se grabará. Si se siente incómodo respondiendo alguna pregunta, puede omitirla o dejar de hacer la encuesta en cualquier momento.

Si prefiere completar esta encuesta en una página web, podemos enviarle una invitación si nos dice su dirección de correo electrónico.
